The screenshot shows the Blogger 'Post a Comment' interface. At the top left is a 'Post a Comment' button. Below it is a text input field containing 'John/5 Benson' and a paragraph of text: 'I found it interesting that to safely warm up a sea turtle that has suffered from cold-stun you need to do it very, very slowly, sometimes taking several days.' Below the text field is a 'Comment as:' dropdown menu with a 'Post Comment' button to its left. The dropdown menu is open, showing options: 'Select profile...', 'Google Account', 'LiveJournal', 'WordPress', 'TypePad', 'AIM', 'OpenID', 'Name/URL', and 'Anonymous'. A red exclamation mark icon is placed over the 'Anonymous' option. Callout boxes provide instructions: one points to the text field with the text 'First type your first name. If you are posting for someone other than your classroom teacher add your grade and teacher's name.'; another points to the text area with 'Continue with your blog post comment.'; and a third points to the 'Anonymous' option with 'Select Anonymous from the 'Comment as:' options.'
